Draft 1.0, 30 October 2026

CONCEPT

Four papers. Four parties. One point.

Rushta is a prescription workflow that connects doctors, patients, the pharmacy and the clinic. The mark is four sheets of paper coming together to form a medical cross, so all four are connected at a single point.

Careful · Plain · Exact · Local · Accountable

THE IDEA

Four papers, one cross

The story behind the mark.

1. Four papers
   Each arm is a sheet: a prescription, a record, a document.
2. Four parties
   One sheet for each: doctors, patients, the pharmacy and the clinic.
3. One point
   The sheets come together at the centre, so all four are connected at a single point.
4. Soft corners, sharp tips
   Corners soften like the edge of a page. The tips are where each sheet folds in.

روشتة is the Arabic word for a prescription. The lockup sets it first, in Arabic, and gives the English equal width.

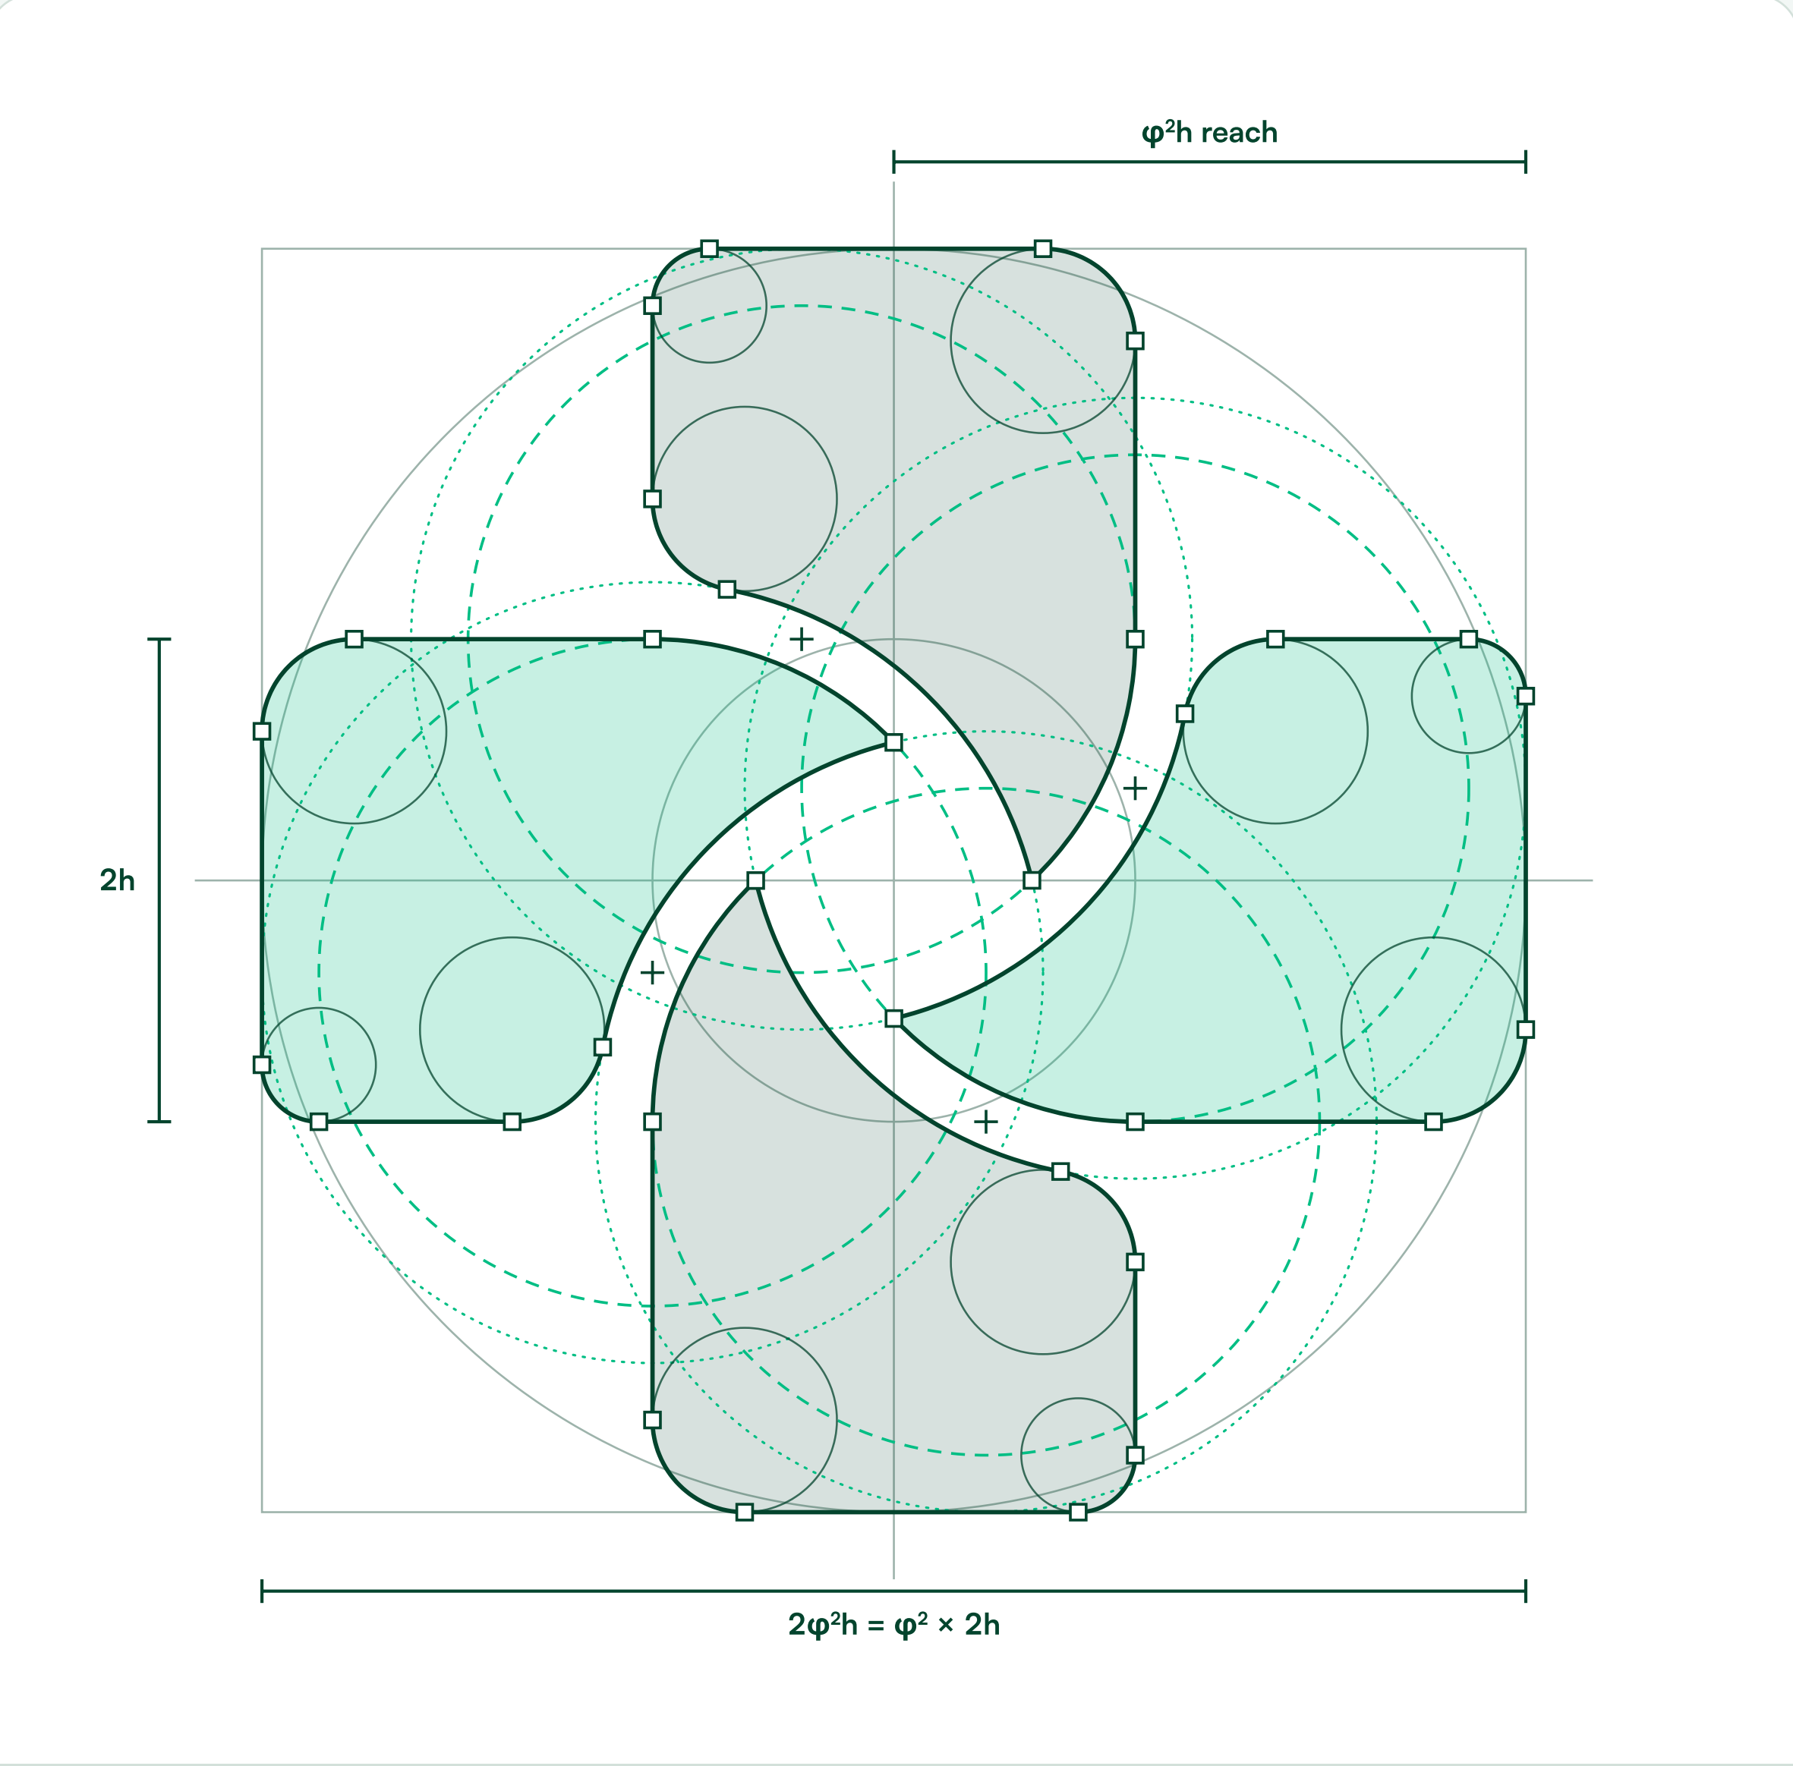
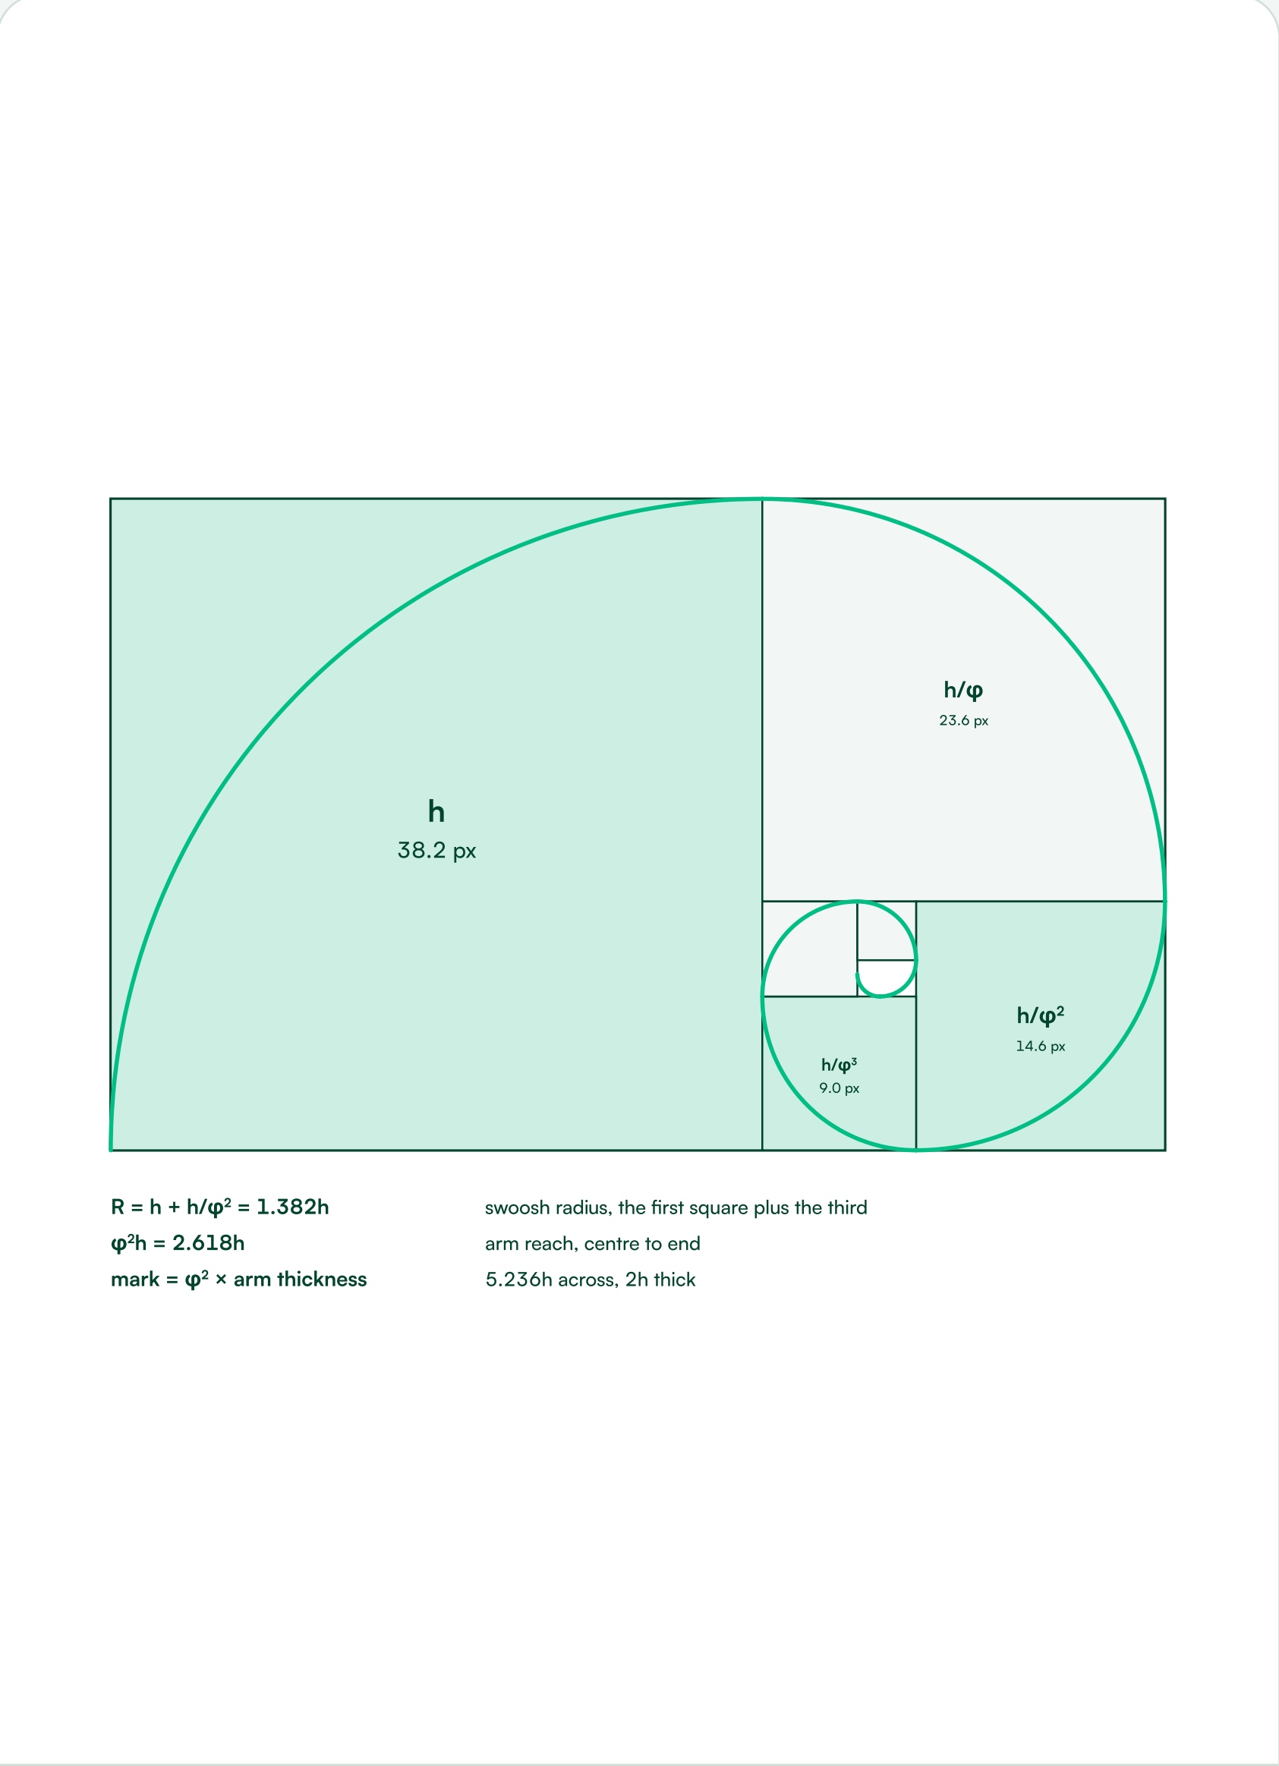
THE MARK

Built from circles and the golden ratio

One arm, turned four times. Every curve is a true circular arc, every radius a step down the golden ladder, measured in h, the half-thickness of an arm. The mark's width is φ^2 times the thickness of an arm.



The circle skeleton. Dashed circles carry the swoosh. Dotted circles are the same centres, grown by the channel gap.



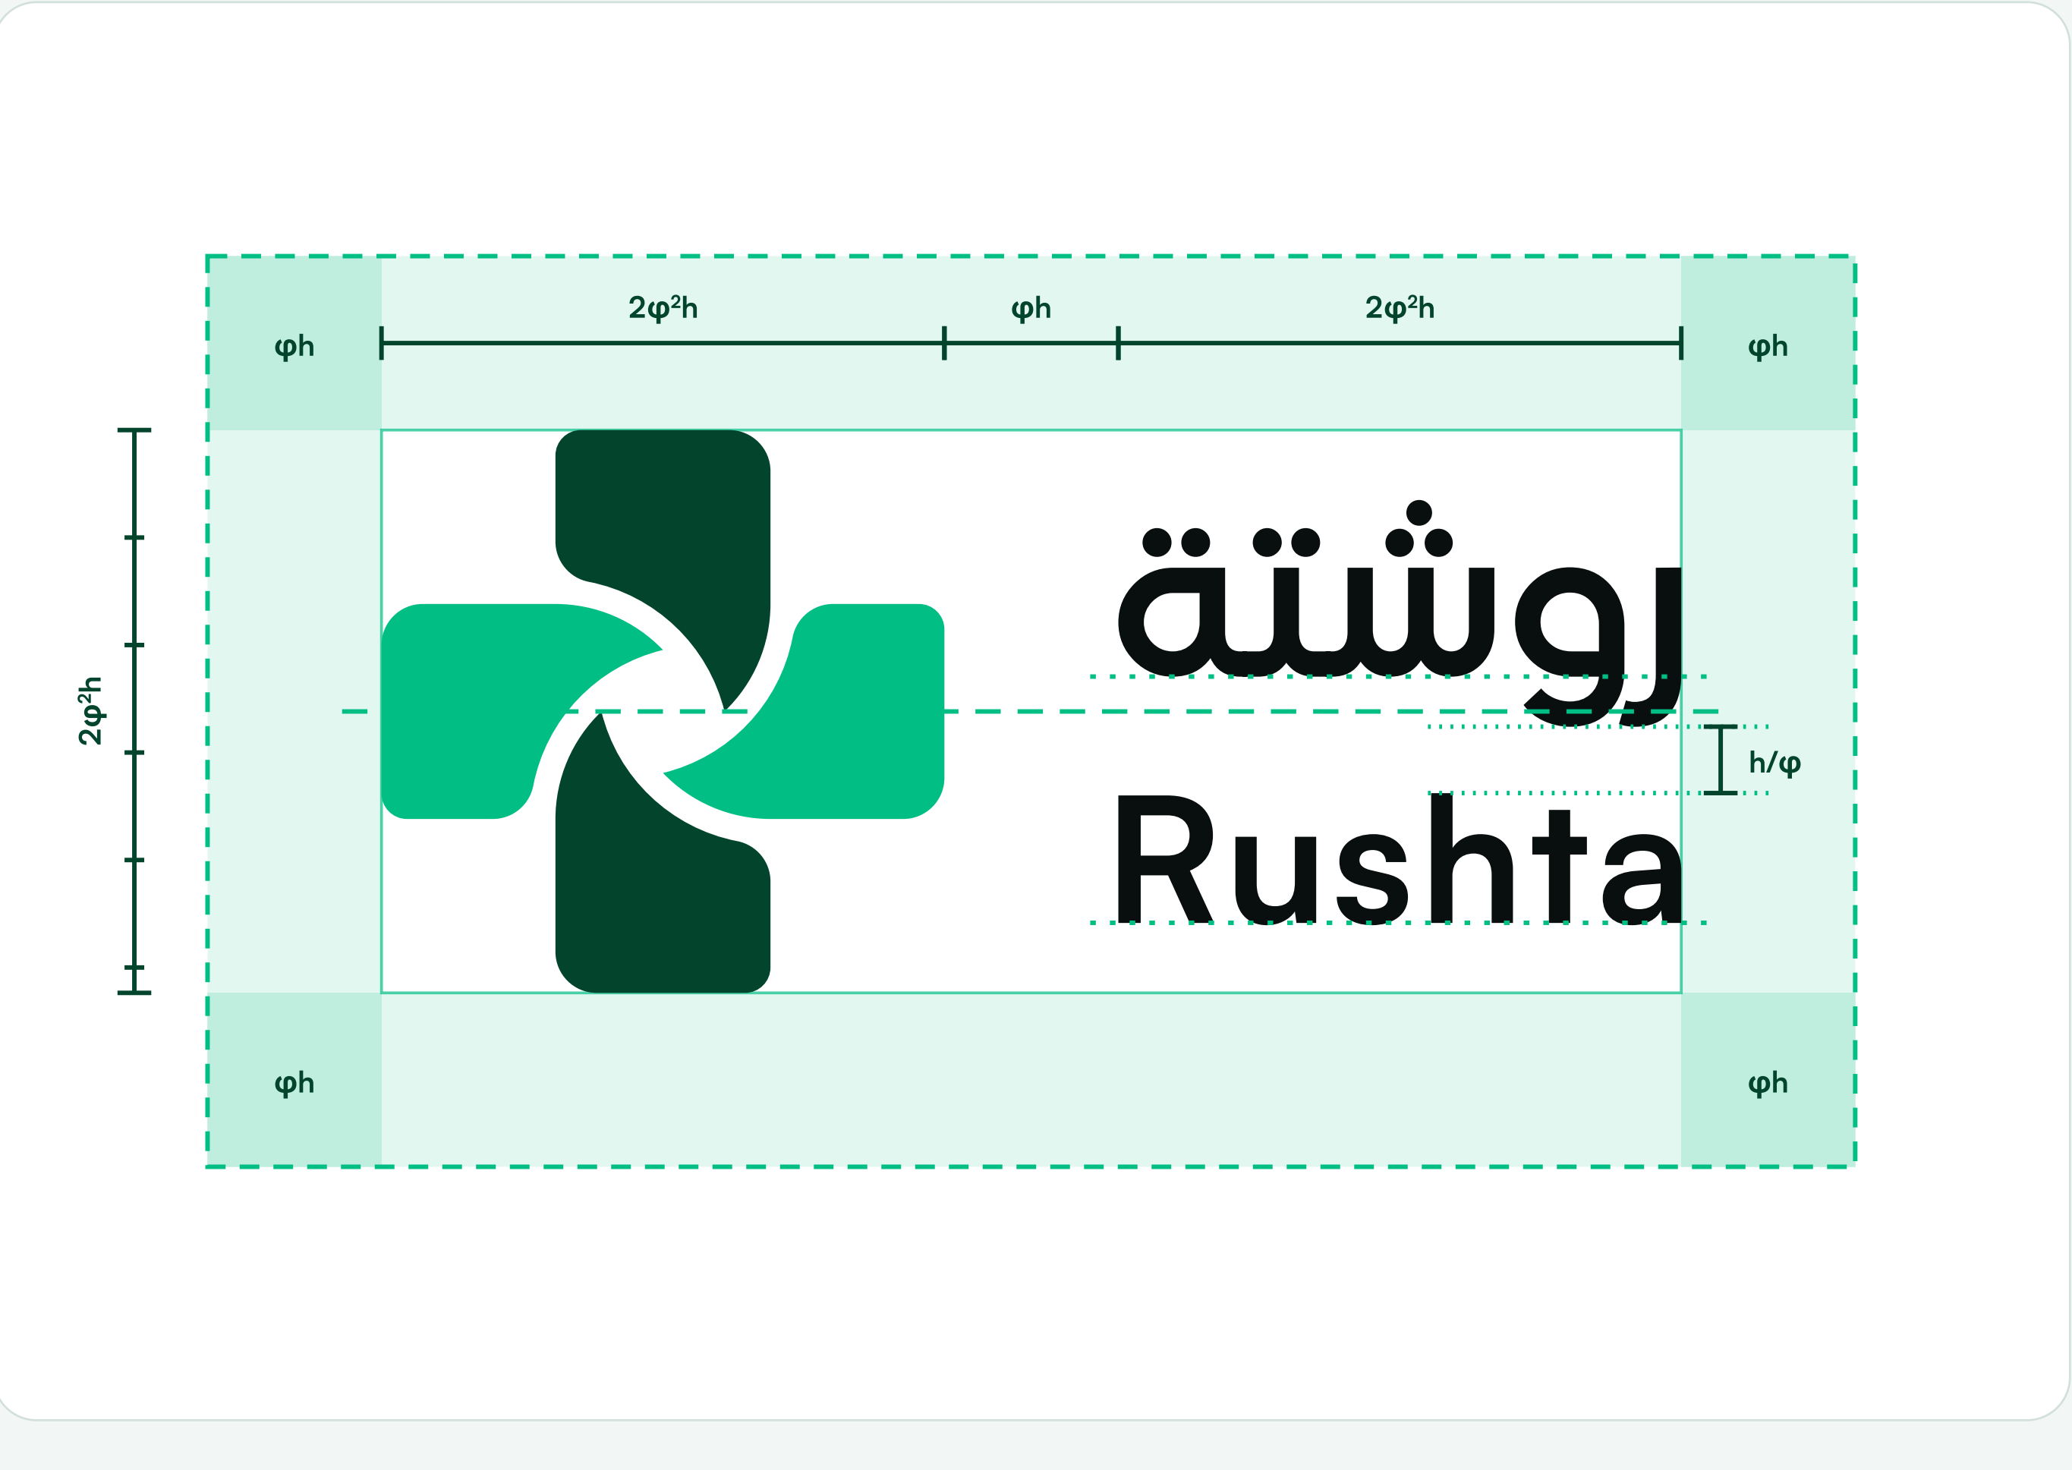
$R = h + h/\varphi^2 = 1.382h$	swoosh radius, the first square plus the third
$\varphi^2 h = 2.618h$	arm reach, centre to end
mark = φ^2 × arm thickness	5.236h across, 2h thick

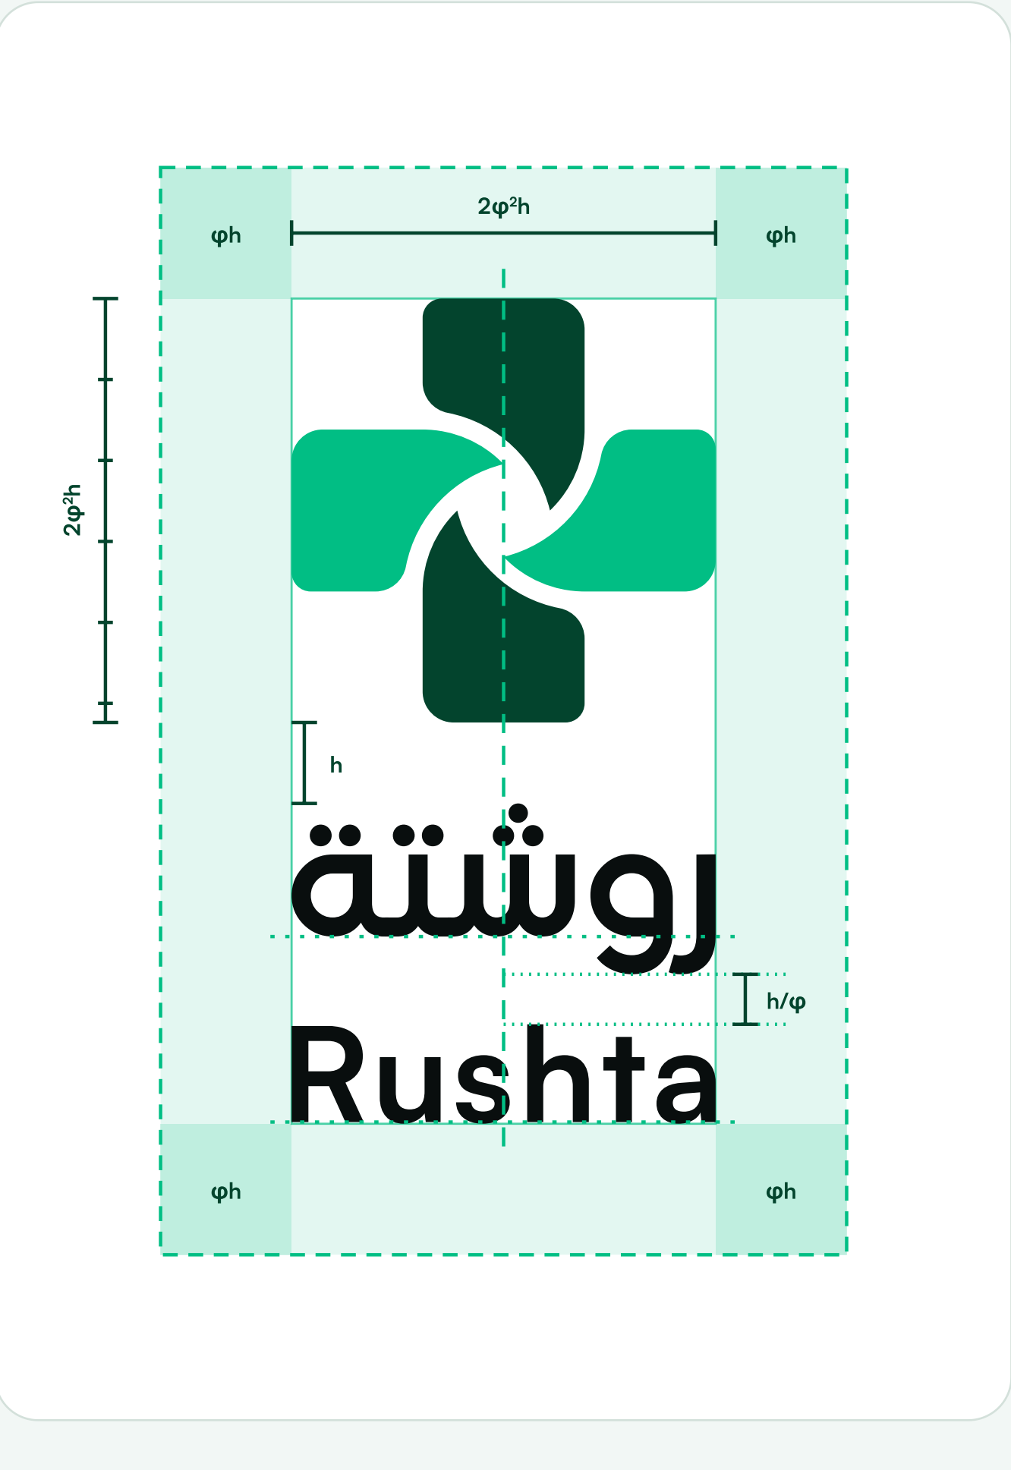
The golden rectangle and its spiral. The squares are the radii the mark uses.

LOCKUP SPACING

One unit, h

The lockup uses the mark's own unit, h, the half-thickness of an arm. Mark to text is φh. The text block is as wide as the mark. Clear space is φh on every side.





IN USE

Applications

Placeholders stand in for the clinic. On a printed prescription the clinic leads and Rushta appears once in the footer.
